PLAINTIFF THOMAS M. COOLEY LAW SCHOOL'S SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF OPPOSING DEFENDANT JOHN DOE 1'S MOTION TO QUASH

RECEIVED

SEP 23 2011
Clerk of the Court
39th Judicial Circuit

Plaintiff Thomas M. Cooley Law School respectfully submits this supplemental brief to bring to the Court's attention two issues that bear directly on the Court's in camera review hearing, scheduled for Monday, September 26, 2011, and more generally on the Court's rulings on Defendant John Doe 1's Motion to Quash. The first issue is the Weebly, Inc. Terms of Service that Defendant John Doe 1 agreed to as a condition of using Weebly's web site to create the blog postings at issue in this action. Those terms specifically granted Weebly the sole discretion to disclose Defendant's identity, and render unreasonable Defendant's alleged expectation of anonymity in the Weebly materials, as he argued to this Court on September 7. The second issue is the applicability of MCR 2.302(B)(7) to non-party Weebly, Inc.'s response to Cooley's legitimate California subpoena in this action. As discussed below, that rule by its terms simply does not apply here.

A. Defendant John Doe 1 Had No Legitimate Expectation of Anonymity With Respect to His Use of the Weebly Site

Cooley believes the Court should be aware, prior to the in camera review, of Weebly, Inc.'s Terms of Service (attached as Exhibit A), to which Defendant John Doe 1 agreed when he created the blog post at issue in this action. The terms are significant because they grant Weebly sole discretion to disclose any and all information from Defendant. That fact renders unreasonable Defendant's arguments to this Court in his Motion to Quash and at the hearing that he had an expectation of privacy and anonymity when he posted the alleged defamatory statements about Cooley on the blog.

Specifically, Weebly's Terms and Service (attached as Exhibit A) provide the following:

You acknowledge and agree that we may preserve Content and may also disclose Content if required to do so by law or in the good faith belief that such preservation or disclosure is reasonably necessary to: (a) comply with legal process; (b) enforce these Terms; (c) respond to claims that any Content violates the rights of third parties; or (d) protect our rights, property, or personal safety and those of our users and the public.

(Exhibit A ¶ 8; emphasis added.) “Content” is defined in the terms to include “[a]ll information, data, text,” etc. The Terms further provide:

You agree that you will not:

(a) upload, post, transmit or otherwise make available any Content that is unlawful, harmful, threatening, abusive, harassing, tortuous [sic], defamatory, vulgar, obscene, libelous, invasive of another’s privacy (up to, but not excluding any address, email, phone number, or any other contact information without the written consent of the owner of such information), hateful, or racially, ethnically or otherwise objectionable[.]

(Id.)

The terms of service to which Defendant John Doe 1 agreed when he created his blog, in other words, granted Weebly the discretion to disclose identifying information about Defendant—not only when required by law, but also, among other reasons, “in the good faith belief that such . . . disclosure is reasonably necessary” to “enforce these Terms,” including terms that prohibit defamatory content, or to “respond to claims that any Content violates the rights of third-parties.” (Id.) Notably the terms do not call for Weebly to make any judgment whether the content is in fact abusive, harmful, defamatory, etc. Instead, the right arises upon a claim of such wrongful conduct.

Weebly’s discretion makes completely unreasonable any expectation Defendant could have had that his identity would remain hidden when he created his blog or when he posted harmful, abusive, tortious, and defamatory content on the Weebly site. By using Weebly’s site, he expressly agreed to Weebly’s Terms of Service that Weebly would have sole discretion to disclose the identifying information he submitted.

B. MCR 2.302(B)(7) Applies Only to Claims of Attorney-Client Privilege or Work-Product Protection, Neither of Which Apply to Weebly's Subpoena Response

Notwithstanding Defendant's meritless argument to the contrary, MCR 2.302(B)(7) simply does not apply to Weebly's subpoena response here. The rule was one of several electronic-discovery amendments to the court rules, and was enacted to protect parties against inadvertent waiver of the attorney-client privilege and work-product doctrine in large-scale electronic document productions. See Comment to 2008 Amendment (noting that MCR 2.302(B)(7) was introduced in a set of amendments designed to "update Michigan's discovery rules as they relate to electronically stored information"). The rule, which mirrors Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b)(5)(B), provides procedures for parties to protect against waiver of attorney-client-privileged or work-product-protected documents after they are inadvertently produced in discovery. See Advisory Committee Notes to Fed. R. Civ. P. 26 (noting that the rule is aimed at protecting against "privilege waiver" and the increased risk of waiver "because of the volume of electronically stored information and the difficulty in ensuring that all information to be produced has in fact been reviewed"); see Bd. of Trustees, Sheet Metal Workers' Nat. Pension Fund v. Palladium Equity Partners, LLC, 722 F. Supp. 2d 845 (E.D. Mich. 2010) (applying Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5)(B) to a party's claim of attorney-client privilege with respect to documents it produced in a 4.3-million-page electronic document production).

Indeed, MCR 2.302(B)(7), by its terms, applies only to a claim of "privilege or of protection as trial-preparation material" in such circumstances. MCR 2.302(B)(7) (emphasis added). The privilege is the attorney-client privilege—as evidenced by the background and context of the rule—and the rule specifically defines "trial-preparation material" in an earlier subsection as documents and information "prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial." MCR 2.302(B)(3). The information provided by Weebly is neither attorney-client privileged nor trial-preparation material. No party has ever asserted that the Weebly information is either of those things and, indeed, the Court did not find at the hearing on Defendant's Motion to Quash that Defendant had asserted any claim that the Weebly information was either of those things. The rule therefore does not apply.

Defendant John Doe 1 nonetheless asserted, both in his supplemental brief to the Court dated September 2, 2011 and to the Court at the hearing, that MCR 2.302(B)(7) applied simply because the information purportedly had been "inadvertently produced" and because Defendant had made some claim of "protection." (See Defendant's Supplemental Brief at 4) ("MCR 2.302(C)(7) [sic] address [sic] the issue of documents and/or information that is inadvertently produced").¹ The Court indicated at the hearing that Defendant's general claim of "protection"—which was not a claim of "protection as trial-preparation material"—was sufficient together with a finding of inadvertent production to invoke MCR 2.302(B)(7).

That finding was, plain and simple, error. MCR 2.302(B)(7) does not apply in every situation where a party asserts some nebulous claim of "protection." Nor does it apply to every situation where documents are "inadvertently produced." It applies instead only where the "protection" asserted is "protection as trial-preparation material," and it operates to protect a party from waiver only when trial preparation material is inadvertently produced in discovery. Indeed, it is telling that Defendant has not cited a single case—in Michigan or in any federal court applying the analogous federal rule—where a court applied the rule to anything other than attorney-client privileged or work-product documents.

And for good reason. Otherwise, parties could claim some undefined "protection"—as Defendant now does here—with respect to any document produced in discovery in an action and automatically trigger the return, claw-back, preservation, sequestration, and non-use provisions of MCR 2.302(B)(7). Under that improper construction, the rule would wreak havoc on the open liberal discovery process and place an undue burden on the parties. The Court should reject that dangerous, unwarranted, and unduly burdensome precedent in this case. MCR 2.302(B)(7) simply does not apply here.

Respectfully submitted,

MILLER, CANFIELD, PADDOCK AND STONE, P.L.C.

You and Weebly agree to submit to the personal and exclusive jurisdiction of the courts located within San Francisco, California.
